

FRANCE FAVORS ARMS REDUCTION

Ready to Support Any "Safe" Proposition at Washington Conference

PROTECTION IS DEMANDED

By the Associated Press

Paris, Oct. 10.—The French delegation is going to the Washington conference disposed to entertain any safe proposition by which France can save to the limit on military and naval outlay. It was said today by an official close to the French delegation that from the time since it was learned that it is expected in official circles here that the cost of maintenance of the troops of occupation in the Rhineland and the possibility of reducing the forces there will come up in Washington.

The army and navy may be costing France 4,500,000,000 francs annually, while the deficit in the budget is $2,500,000,000 francs, nearly all of which must be made up by economies in the military and naval sections. If France should be guaranteed otherwise no further sacrifices from the east.

The French delegation is not yet ready to talk of a definite proposition, but the tendency of comment in official circles is suggestive of a proposal to cut the army and navy expenses in half. It is pointed out that there is no more department in which France is able to reduce the outlay than in the sections relating to the fixed interest and ordinary Government expenses.

S. Nazaire, France, Oct. 10.—By A. P.—"France must remain armed as long as her security is not assured," was the declaration made yesterday by Aristide Briand, French Premier, in an address outlining French foreign policy.

M. Briand was surrounded by six Ministers of his Cabinet and four Under-Secretaries. He declared that at the present moment the French Premier resists to pay any tribute to demands from all quarters with the exception of those who were trying to reduce the cost of maintenance of the troops of occupation in the Rhineland and the possibility of reducing the forces there will come up in Washington.

The French delegation is not yet the steady decline of Mrs. Griswold's appearance from the time of the execution of the deed of trust, with the result a fatigued, pale-faced, half-dressed woman, down on the stage, just before her death, when her appearance was "very shabby." The witness told of being called to Mrs. Griswold's home at one time and asked to prepare to take care of an Alaskan seal coat, worth between $3000 and $4000. Mrs. Griswold at this time declared, according to the witness, that her "things were being stolen right and left." Mrs. Elsey also swore that Mrs. Griswold once came to her, and the response of the way she was being treated.

The witness admitted this morning included all of those written by Mrs. Griswold to her daughter, the Countess, after the latter was married, and taken together they constitute a remarkable record of the misfortunes which seemed to dog the trail of the former American beauty. These letters show the love of Mrs. Griswold for her son, the belief that only in this manner could she protect her estate from people who were trying to robbery her, that for many months after this Mrs. Griswold made her believe that the estate was in a more prosperous condition than it was being managed by her son; and that, during the last few years of her life, Mrs. Griswold turned against Mrs. Drischmann and wanted to be rid of her. She was never content from doing so because she would be unable to hold her trust as well as to hold her son, and she had been compelled to do so.

Third Secretary Please

London, Oct. 10.—Michael Collins, Sinn Fein Minister of Finance, arrived in London today, completing the Sinn Fein delegation which tomorrow will confer with representatives of the British Government to ascertain "how the association of Ireland with the community of nations known as the British Empire may best be reconciled with Irish national aspirations." The Sinn Fein delegates were early at work today completing arrangements for the meeting.

Prime Minister Lloyd George and the members of his Cabinet forming the British delegation also had a meeting to decide upon the course of procedure.

Third Secretary Please

Mr. Collins is staying with the secretary of the Irish delegation, the other Sinn Fein delegates being accommodated in another residence.

Another Third Secretary, Sir Edward Carson, arrived in London yesterday, and the morning he was delighted with the success of the Sinn Fein in securing the services of a third secretary to the Irish delegation of John Chartres, who besides being highly celebrated in legal matters, helped to found the War Office Armaments Output Committee during the war and for nine years was director of the Intelligence Department of the London Times.

Mr. Griffith said he expected Mr. Chartres to be of great value in interpreting the views of the Sinn Fein.

Stripped of Everything

On February 23, 1918, a little more than a year preceding the signing of the Treaty of Versailles, Mrs. Griswold wrote her husband:

"Everything has been taken from me—jewels, silver, etc. She [Mrs. Drischmann] is furious because you have not written to her and changes her not for leniency, so tell your son why you should not let him know of her excesses. She continually goes on about us."

According to the testimony given by Mrs. Drischmann, she was not engaged in any business at this time.

Apparently to settle his inheritance to Mrs. Griswold in May, 1918, he gave to the Bank of the month of $1,000.

He gave the sum of $1,000 to his wife, Mrs. Drischmann, and $1,000 to his son, Charles Miller, and $1,000 to his daughter, Mrs. Drischmann, and all sorts of things to his son, Charles Miller.

"I have lived in a tumult. My trustee is very ill and I cannot get it out until she gets well. So even though you nothing. How glad I will be to receive and live in a hotel a quiet place and lights and people."

Miller, for eighteen years an employee of the Drischmanns, acquired a piece of property formerly belonging to Mrs. Griswold.

"The books will show that," replied Mrs. Drischmann.

Judge Cole gathered up an armful of books and laid them before the witness.

"Please consult the books and you will see," he said.

Knew Nothing About Books

Mrs. Drischmann looked at the books in a helpless sort of way. After a moment's hesitation, she said:

"To start with, I don't know enough to tell you if it is, may as well be honest. I don't know anything about the books."

In reply to further questioning, Mr. Drischmann said that her bookskeeper, Mrs. C. S. Waxter, could probably get the information from the books.

The rise in fortune of Charles Miller was hinted at during the morning proceedings. According to Mrs. Drischmann, he was a friend of her father and had been an employee for eighteen years. Other witnesses had testified that he was for a time employed as an attendant and a chauffeur for Mrs. Griswold during the time Mrs. Drischmann was trustee of the Griswold estate.

Mrs. Drischmann admitted that she and Paul Miller $6000 out of the Griswold funds because of a rupture he was alleged to have sustained. Miller had fallen off. This payment, Mrs. Drischmann declared, had been authorized by Mrs. Griswold. Later, the witness testified, Miller "brought" the Griswold estate $5000, and later there was transferred to him the Griswold property in Northfield.

Miss Elsey, a moderate size, testified that she saw Miller wearing an enormous diamond. Commenting on this to Mrs. Griswold, the witness said the latter declared that it was her son which she had had reser and was allowing Miller, then acting as her chauffeur, to wear for "safe keeping."

Mrs. Elsey also testified concerning

Desmond Fitzgerald, Sinn Fein Minister of Pronunciation, said today he expected the conference commencing tomorrow would decide to issue an agreed communiqué daily, as was done when Eamon de Valera, the Irish Republican leader, and Mr. Lloyd George, in London, some time ago. If the British representatives are to follow the Sinn Fein, Fitzgerald declared, the Sinn Fein delegates will claim a similar right and they have brought a man from Dublin with them for that purpose.

Whatever decisions were reached by the British conference this morning will be officially communicated to the delegation disbanding immediately.

This action was taken directly after the estate was turned over to Mrs. Drischmann, as at that time, according to the testimony of the previous witness, it was worth $500,000 in personal effects.

After the sale of the estate, Mrs. Drischmann, who was then 80 years old, sold all of her possessions, including the string of pearls which she sold for $1000, and sold the rest of her possessions.

From the final pictures and documents, it appears that the estate
